Doris Huestis Mills Speirs was a life-time resident of Toronto. As an artist she painted with the Group of Seven. As a benefactor she supported their work. She was also a writer, and birder. Her field studies on the evening grosbeak were published in a volume of A.C. Bent's series of life histories of North American birds as "Hespercphora Vespertina Brooksi Grinnell, Western Evening Grosbeak" in Life Histories of North American Cardinals, Grosbeaks, ... and Allies (1968), pp. 237-251

Biographical articles:

Doris Huestis Speirs 1894-1989

Doris Huestis Speirs died on October 24, 1989, shortly before her 95th birthday. She was a remarkable woman, an ornithologist to be sure, but also an artist and poet. Her broad interests were inspired by a love of beauty, especially in nature, and a desire to help others in whom she saw evidence of creativity.

She was proficient as an artist before bird study became her consuming interest. In 1919, as Mrs. Doris Mills, she pioneered the picture rental system, approaching members of the Group of Seven to lend their pictures. Soon, with the encouragement of A.Y. Jackson and J.E.H. MacDonald, she herself was painting. Her pictures had a directness and simplicity as well as the bold use of colour and design that characterized the work of her mentors. Her subjects were taken directly or indirectly from nature. Beginning in 1926, she exhibited with the Group and continued to do so with the Canadian Group of Painters. Although her work appeared in later exhibitions and 11 of her paintings are in Canadian and international galleries, she stopped painting in 1937 as her attention turned more and more to the study of birds. She never lost her interest in art, however, and continued to collect the works of young painters. Among those she encouraged were Robert Bateman and Barry Kent Mackay.

As early as 1916 she described herself as a bird watcher, and in that year, she identified 56 species in and around Toronto. In 1936 she began to keep a regular diary, recording her observations of bird behaviour. In 1937, while visiting her friend Lawren and Bess Harris in New Hampshire, she saw her first Evening Grosbeaks. "They were as brilliant as a tree full of parakeets" she wrote in her diary, and went on to describe their plumage and behaviour. She did an oil sketch of one seen from a window. Thus began her serious observation of birds.

Shortly after this she met Murray Speirs, who was pursuing graduate studies in ornithology, and they were married in 1939. Over the next fifty years they helped each other with bird studies. Doris pursued her interest in Evening Grosbeaks, observing them in the field and spending long hours watching nests in the blackfly season. She also compiled information from the literature and from her many correspondents.

She wrote a number of articles on birds, beginning with a note in The Auk in 1937. About half her contributions dealt with Evening Grosbeaks and most of them appeared in local publications including The Jack-Pine Warbler, The Toronto Field-Naturalists' Club Newsletter, The Wood Duck, The Bulletin of the Maine Audubon Society, The Blue Jay, The Ontario Field Biologist, The Thunder Bay Naturalists' Club Newsletter, The Federation of Ontario Naturalists' Bulletin, and The Curlew. Her major work in ornithology was undoubtedly the accounts of Eastern, Western and Mexican Evening Grosbeaks in Bent's Life Histories of North American Cardinals, Grosbeaks, Buntings, Towhees, Finches, Sparrows and Allies, published by the Smithsonian Institute in 1968. With her husband Murray, she co-authored the account of Lincoln's Sparrow in the same series. Much of the latter work was based on field studies which the Speirs carried out in Northern Ontario in 1956. These articles amply demonstrate the thoroughness and attention to detail that characterized Doris Speirs' observations of birds as well as the wide network of correspondents with whom she kept in touch.

Among those she met and corresponded with, three were particularly influential. As early as 1940, Doris knew Margaret Morse Nice and was greatly impressed by her critical approach. In 1952 when Doris was instrumental in founding the first women's group devoted to bird study, it was named appropriately the Margaret Nice Ornithological Club. At that time women were excluded from the Toronto Ornithological Club. In 1979, she edited the autobiography of Margaret Nice, Research is a Passion with Me, and still later (1983) edited An Address Book for Naturalists, featuring quotations collected by Margaret Nice.

In 1958, Doris and Murray visited Louise de Kiriline Lawrence who was studying birds and would later write both articles and books on her experiences. Lawrence learned from them “the best and proper way to study birds,” and through them met Margaret Nice. This was the beginning of a close and enduring friendship between Doris and Louise.

In 1958, Doris began to correspond with the noted Finnish ornithologist, Dr. Lars von Haartman who shared her interest in art and also wrote poetry. She was so intrigued with his poems, which were written in Swedish, that she taught herself the language and translated them. The result was of such quality that a volume of her translations entitled The Forehead's Lyre was published by the University of Toronto Press in 1962. Later (1976) a second volume appeared under the title Black Sails. These translations represent a remarkable feat when one considers that the feeling and poetic quality of the original was faithfully transferred across a language barrier. In 1973, Doris also published “a small harvest” of her own poems from 1922 to 1972 entitled Exercise for Psyche.

Members of the SCO[Society of Canadian Ornithologists] will remember Doris Speirs as a benefactor of many naturalists' and ornithological organizations. She belonged to the American Ornithologists' Union and the Cooper Ornithological Society and was a patron of the Wilson Ornithological Society. She was generous in support of the Federation of Ontario Naturalists, and the Long Point Bird Observatory. Her benefactions to the Society of Canadian Ornithologists made possible the award for significant contributions to ornithology that bears her name, as well as the more recent Taverner research awards. Both these initiatives are very much in the spirit of Doris Speirs' own desire to encourage the work of others.

She received a number of honours for her work. In 1974 Doris and Murray were awarded jointly the Ontario Conservation Trophy by the Federation of Ontario Naturalists and the Federation honoured Doris again in 1977. In 1975, she was one of 19 Canadian women honoured for their scientific contributions in an exhibition at the National Museum of Natural Sciences in Ottawa.

Doris Speirs was a highly intelligent person but was not formally trained in any of the areas in which she excelled. She approached challenges with enthusiasm, imagination and considerable skill. She was encouraged and helped by her many friends – both artists and ornithologists – and especially by her husband, Murray Speirs. She was sustained by a deep faith rooted in Christian Science. She appealed to the better natures of all those who knew her and retained a buoyant optimism about the future. In her last year, aided by her secretary John Sabeau, she was working on seven books based on her correspondence. To visit her was an uplifting experience, because she invariably enthused about a new artist she had discovered, birds she had recently observed or letters she had received. It was a privilege and inspiration to have known her. I am indebted to J. Murray Speirs and John Sabean for providing background material.

Names in the News: Doris Huestis Speirs

Another Artistic Note By John W. Sabean

The name Doris Huestis Speirs, or her name by a previous marriage, Doris Huestis Mills, occurs frequently in art histories of the 1920s and 1930s, especially those pertaining to the Group of Seven. She was herself a painter, a close friend of several members of the Group, and an invited contributor to their exhibitions from 1926 to 1931. She was not a prominent artist, but was both inspired by the Group and in turn one of their strongest supporters. Her role in the art world of the period is difficult to assess, but is significant nevertheless.

Doris Mills, as she was in those days, the wife of T. Gordon Mills, an executive with the T. Eaton Company, and sometime art critic and elected member of the Art Gallery of Toronto [now the Art Gallery of Ontario], was an amateur painter, one of a small coterie of largely untrained, free-lance painters encouraged in their efforts by the Group. Charles C. Hill, Curator of Canadian Art at the National Gallery of Canada, has documented the role of these amateurs in his recent book, The Group of Seven: Art for a Nation, which was not only a detailed history of the Group, but the catalogue which accompanied the 75th anniversary exhibition of the founding of the Group.

This story continues from my article on Fred and Bess Housser in the previous issue of Pathmaster. There I related Mills' part in the creation of the practice of renting art and her learning to paint with but little help from other painters. Full of confidence in her own achievements she then went to two of her closest friends (Bess Housser and Marjorie Meredith) and one of her sisters (Marion Miller) and initiated them into the art world as well. All four of the women attained a certain degree of success. In turn, it should be noted, some of these women had influence on other young artists.

In the 1920s Doris Mills (and her husband) began to purchase works of art. To stay within their budget they confined themselves to smaller works of art for the most part, but they were among the earliest individuals to collect works of the Group of Seven. At the same time they purchased the works of a number of young artists, and in this way helped them to get started.

A couple of writers have noted that Mills was among the earliest Canadian painters to experiment in an abstract mode.

Mills was an enthusiastic promoter of the Group of Seven wherever she went. At it turned out she visited the art galleries in New York City several times during the 1920s, and there met a number of prominent figures of the American art scene, including artists Rockwell Kent, Georgia O'Keeffe, and John Marin, gallery owners/directors Alfred Stieglitz and Gerald Kelley, and critics Walter Pach and C. Lewis Hind, among others. With these people she discussed the artwork in the New York galleries and spoke in glowing terms of what the Group of Seven were attempting in Canada. After Housser's history of the Group was published in 1926 she sent copies of the book to many of these acquaintances. For some, her spirited discussion of the Group was their first knowledge of the Group's existence, for others no doubt it gave them reason to pay closer attention.

Mills corresponded with all of these American art figures. Kent even sent her a copy of his book Voyaging Southward from the Strait of Magellan (N.Y.: G.P. Putnam's Sons, 1924) in which he wrote an inscription to her inside the cover. Dated 24 October 1924, Kent wrote: "Praying that New York and Toronto, the painter and one of the little few he works for, and I and you, may not be, after all, so very far apart, I put our names here close together. Rockwell Kent to Doris Mills." From Stieglitz's gallery Mills bought one of O'Keeffe's paintings. This painting in later years she willed to the AGO where it went after her death in 1989, and was evaluated at over a quarter of a million dollars.

All of this was, however, before Mills, as Mrs. Speirs moved to Pickering in 1948. By this time she was no longer painting, her interests having turned to ecology and ornithology, but she had still an important role to play in the art world. For one thing, she continued to encourage young artists. Most prominent among these was a young Robert Bateman. She was also constantly being asked to loan out works from her collection for exhibitions, and indeed, most exhibitions of Group of Seven works contain one or more works on loan.
